HONOURING HISTORY

My dear friend Alan Tiesbow, the noted Canadian architect and leader of the redesign of our Kingsway store, recently accompanied me on an inspiring walk through the heart of downtown Toronto. We admired some of the city's oldest buildings and discussed their cultural significance and design influences.

I began my own working life as an architect, and the creative elements inherent in architecture — balance, honesty, integrity, passion — hold a central focus in my work of designing jewellery. This is why I have made the particular connection between architecture and jewellery the theme of this year's edition of Humbertown Jewellers Magazine.

I believe that the skills necessary for anyone to become a successful architect are the same skills required for crafting exceptional jewellery: a steady hand, a creative visionary eye and a deep level of thoughtful consideration. All three elements come together to produce Humbertown Jewellers' renowned quality.

I established my vision for Humbertown Jewellers in 1980, bringing with me the values I held in highest regard as an architect. These same values, which deepen in understanding and practice every year, have continued to guide our work.

I hope that your experience with us will offer you a clear understanding of Humbertown Jewellers as Canada's premier destination for exclusive jewellery.

More than four decades later, I love what I do every single day. It has been a gift and an honour to return to my family's 200-year legacy of creating exceptional jewellery pieces.

The history of architecture is compelling. It serves as a source of inspiration. When we infuse our creations with values that stand the test of time, we recognize it. We know it. This is our work.
