Separated from her siblings at a young age, Lane is the ninth of eleven children. Along with her younger siblings, she was placed in foster care, facing immense challenges in the years that followed. Through love and determination, the sisters eventually reunited, overcoming their separation. Lane dedicated 15 years to collecting their stories, each told from the unique perspective of the sisters, capturing their journeys of resilience, healing, and triumph over abuse.

"Broken Water is a powerful, compelling story that reveals the failure of orphanages and foster care of years past. It reinforces the need for close inspections of children who live in foster care or boarding schools today. This book was impossible to put down until I finished reading every word," - Writers Digest.

In addition to her writing, Lane has dedicated her life to advocating for victims of child abuse. Her work as a minister has allowed her to connect with survivors on a profoundly personal level, inspiring countless individuals to reclaim their power and find hope through faith.

"I am dedicated to sharing the hope, healing, and inspiration that have shaped my life. 'Broken Water' reflects life's contrasts—hope and despair, sadness and joy, brokenness and healing. I hope readers find in its pages the words, space, and motivation to begin their own journey toward healing," Lane states.

Lane's commitment to raising awareness about child abuse and empowering survivors extends beyond the pages of her book. She frequently speaks at conferences, churches, and community events, sharing her personal story and spreading a message of resilience.
