This growth trajectory is expected to continue, with the market predicted to reach $25.23 billion by 2028, at a CAGR of 6.0%. Factors propelling this trend include increasing global grain production, rising demand for processed grains, growing awareness of food safety, the expansion of agribusinesses, and a surge in grain exports.

What Drives the Grain Cleaner Market Forward?

The rising global food demand is a key driver propelling the growth of the grain cleaner market.

Global population growth, escalating urbanization, and increased income levels are spurring greater food consumption and dietary changes. Grain cleaners play a significant role in food processing, as they are used to remove impurities, thus guaranteeing the quality and safety of grains before milling or further processing.
