Shenandoah Sunrise

We strove for that home-movie feel - that brings families together. I think millions of people will recognize these places, instantly resonate, and in their minds, replace our family with their own.”

Tim Miskimon, The Miskimon Brothers, American band

The new music video takes viewers on a scenic journey through the iconic landscapes of Virginia and West Virginia, showcasing the beauty and tranquility of the Shenandoah Valley region while highlighting deep familial ties that inspired the song. The video's timeless and homemade feel, punctuated by stunning 4K footage, features personal moments of Tim and Mark Miskimon, along with their families, capturing a genuine sense of nostalgia and a deep connection to the land that has been part of their and others' family history for decades.

A Journey of Love and Legacy

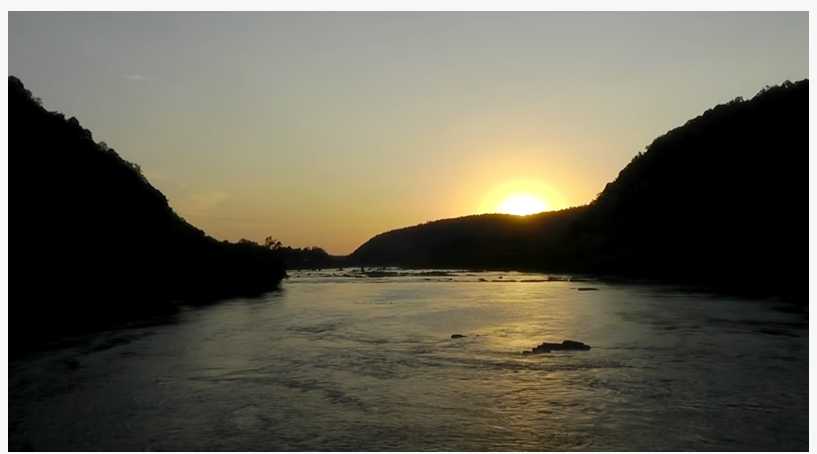

Tim Miskimon, one half of the duo, shared that the inspiration for the new video came from their trips to the Shenandoah Valley. "For years we've made family trips to Skyline Drive and Harper's Ferry, always taking along cameras," Tim explained. "It was something that had been on my mind for a long time — creating a music video that reflects those memories. When we recorded the song, I knew I wanted those visuals to match the message of the song."

Tim also noted that the journey of creating this music video was personally enriching. "The footage came from countless trips, with my wife Karen, our children, and the grandkids. The last sunrise shot in Harper's Ferry on October 12, 2024, was the very one I'd been waiting for. That sunrise gave the video that special feel I had envisioned all along," he said.

While the video offers a stunning visual tribute to the Shenandoah Valley and the Miskimon family's deep ties to the region, it also reflects the universal experience of family, connection forged by spending time together, and the passage of time. Filmed over several months, the music video captures the full essence of the song's lyrics, with breathtaking sunrise shots, sweeping mountain vistas, and intimate family moments. "We strove for that home-movie feel that brings families together. I think millions of people will recognize these places, instantly resonate, and in their minds, replace our family with their own."
