

Church Blessed With Kung-Fu Pastor: Security Film Could Have Prevented the Break-In

OREM, UT, UNITED STATES, December 10, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- About midnight on Thanksgiving, a burglar broke through an Antioch California church house, causing damages up to two thousand dollars. The alert was given to the pastor Nick Neves who was well seasoned in martial arts, fighting off the burglar and giving him to the police. Had other pastors without martial arts been there, they might not have been so blessed.

Windows are the weakest entry point. It may bring light inside but it risks a break-in.

"It was never my goal to hurt the man or to do him harm," Neves told CNN, "I was just hoping to keep him from getting away so that justice could be done and our church could be protected."

This incredible defense to protect the community and the church has put Pastor Nick Neves as a hero. The church would have lost much more than a couple of windows if Neves didn't have the training he already had.

It's unfortunate our community finds itself in a place where people feel it's necessary to take matters of public safety into their own hands"

Unfortunately not every pastor has the ability to do this, which is why extra security such as security film or ballistic glass could prevent the burglar from breaking in.

"It's unfortunate our community finds itself in a place where people feel it's necessary to take matters of public safety into their own hands." Says Antioch Mayor-Elect Ron Bernal at a KYUTV interview about the incident.

Had Pastor Neves not been there when the break-in occurred, his church would have benefitted from security windows.

“It is important to realize the protection a security window offers,” says Quin Denning, CEO of Armitex LLC, a leading manufacturer of ballistic glass. “It slows down entry through a window allowing time for warning and first responders to arrive.”

When self-defense is less of an option, securing the windows is the next viable safety measure. Security film or ballistic glass provides that extra protection needed to slow burglars from getting inside churches and other buildings. Companies like Armitex LLC provide both security film and ballistic glass to help prevent break-ins.

Security film can provide extra protection to keep churches safe
