COVID-19 Impact Analysis on the Lithotripsy Devices Market

According to estimates, North America is anticipated to lead the lithotripsy devices market in 2023 and maintain this dominance throughout the forecast period from 2024 to 2030. This growth is driven by the rising prevalence of urolithiasis and the increasing burden of end-stage renal disease, highlighting the need for effective management solutions. Technological advancements, regulatory approvals, the strong market presence of key players, and ongoing investments in healthcare infrastructure and product innovation are expected to propel the market during this period.

Additionally, The increasing prevalence of stones forming in various organs of the body is driving the demand for lithotripsy procedures. These procedures involve using focused ultrasonic energy or shock waves, guided by fluoroscopy or ultrasound, to break large stones into smaller fragments that can pass through the urinary system. As stones occur in multiple body parts, the lithotripsy devices market is expected to experience significant growth. So, during the projected period, the market for Lithotripsy Devices is anticipated to continue expanding (2024-2030).
