Definition:

Tourism insurance is a type of travel insurance designed to protect travelers from financial loss or unexpected events during their trip. It typically covers a range of incidents such as trip cancellations, medical emergencies, lost baggage, flight delays, and other travel-related risks. Tourism insurance can be purchased for both domestic and international travel and is available in various packages, offering basic coverage to more comprehensive plans, depending on the needs of the traveler. This type of insurance is especially important for people traveling to foreign destinations where healthcare or emergency services might be costly. Additionally, tourism insurance provides peace of mind by ensuring that travelers are financially covered in case of unforeseen circumstances that disrupt their plans.
