About Captain Paul Watson

Captain Paul Watson is a prominent figure in marine conservation, recognized for employing direct-action tactics against illegal fishing and whaling. His arrest has drawn international attention, with conservation groups voicing concerns about the implications of extradition for environmental activism.

Captain Watson was detained on July 21, 2024, by Danish authorities in Nuuk, Greenland, upon arrival on the M/Y John Paul DeJoria. The arrest is linked to an international warrant issued by Japan, citing Watson's anti-whaling campaigns in the Antarctic more than a decade ago. His supporters fear potential extradition to Japan could lead to a life sentence.
