About the Author

Travis Nagatoshi is a poet and storyteller whose work delves into the mysteries of the human spirit, inspired by his family's tradition of Dream Walking. This practice, passed down by his grandmother, Grandma Echo, led him to explore the deeper dimensions of the human spirit in his debut collection, The Codex of Echo. The title "Echo" symbolizes those who feel like faint shadows of their former selves, facing struggles that, though unnamed, form the emotional core of this work.

From an early age, Travis found solace and strength in poetry, using it not only for personal reflection but also to support his grandmother during challenging times. His poems became a source of hope, bridging feelings of loneliness and despair with moments of connection and light. Through the publication of this collection, Travis honors his grandmother's memory and offers his poetry as a beacon of comfort for anyone seeking strength and solace in their own journey.
