innovative, data-driven solutions. Public awareness has grown, government backing has increased, and communities have called for action.

While landmark lawsuits against opioid manufacturers have brought accountability and funding to recovery initiatives, the true shift has been cultural. “The narrative is changing,” said Miliotis. “We’re no longer just talking about the devastation of addiction. We’re asking the right questions: What works? What can we do better? How do we give people not just hope, but the tools to thrive? That’s where OpiAID comes in.”

OpiAID’s technology, which has been successfully implemented in clinics across North Carolina, uses advanced data analytics to provide an innovative and personalized approach to care. By equipping providers with real-time insights, the platform helps patients overcome obstacles and stay on track for long-term success.

Building on this success, OpiAID is now scaling its operations rapidly through strategic licensing partnerships. These collaborations enable clinics across the country to integrate OpiAID’s technology seamlessly into their care models. In the first quarter of 2025 alone, the company’s platform will launch in clinics across Nevada, South Carolina, California, Arizona, and Tennessee, with more locations rolling out throughout the year.

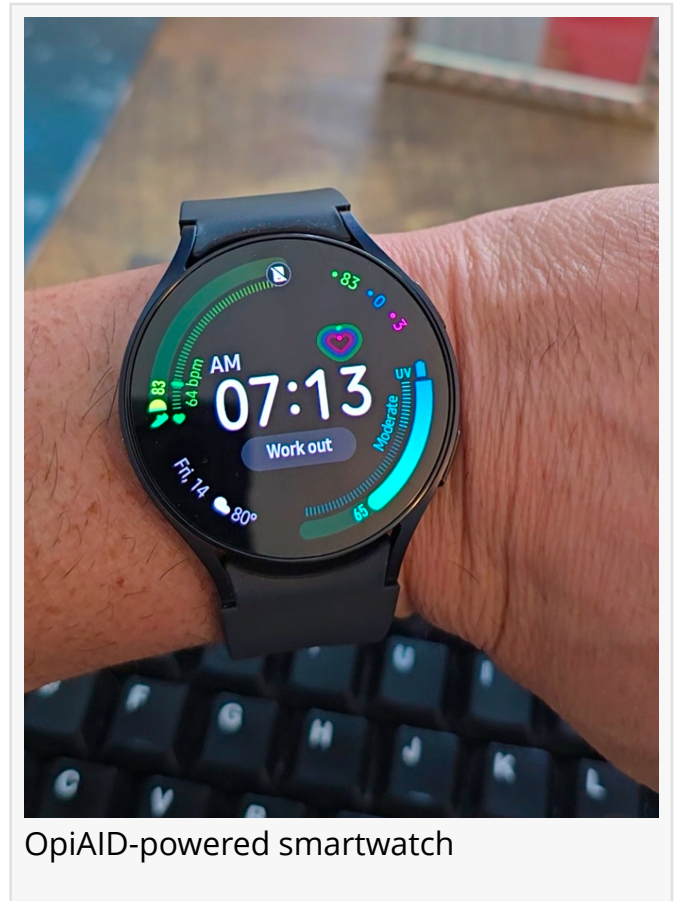

“This is about accessibility,” Miliotis emphasized. “Our strategic licensing partnerships are allowing us to grow quickly and effectively, ensuring that no matter where someone lives—whether it’s a big city or a small rural community—they’ll have access to the best tools for recovery. Directly or indirectly, our technology is going to touch every corner of the country.”

As 2025 begins, OpiAID is at the forefront of a national movement to tackle addiction with innovative, evidence-based solutions. The company’s focus on personalization, accessibility, and long-term success sets it apart as a leader in the recovery space.

“This New Year is about more than resolutions—it’s about action, change, and hope,” Miliotis said. “At OpiAID, we’re proud to be part of the solution, working every day to ensure that those battling addiction have access to the tools they need to reclaim their lives.”
