"This isn't just voice recognition; it's AI-powered assistance that understands, translates, and acts for you," said Simon Wilby, the visionary founder and inventor of WILBY.Ai. "Simon Says is trained to use apps and services on your behalf, breaking language barriers and automating tasks like never before."

Simon Says is powered by AI that has been meticulously trained to interact with apps and services across various industries. Its intuitive design eliminates the need for manual navigation or translation tools, providing a seamless experience for both personal and professional use.

Simon Says revolutionizes how users interact with technology by integrating a powerful suite of capabilities, including answering questions, booking rides with Uber, ordering meals via DoorDash, playing music on Spotify, translating speech, generating images through Midjourney, identifying objects with its camera, and recording voice memos.

"Simon Says isn't just a virtual assistant—it's your multilingual, multitasking digital partner," said Simon Wilby, the inventor and founder of WILBY.AI. "Whether you're managing your daily errands or exploring creative ideas, Simon Says handles it all with remarkable ease and precision."
