“As the parent of two sons currently enrolled in the Broken Arrow School District, I understand the concerns many parents have about the future of public education in our community and state,” said Dr. Williams.

This is a critical moment for Broken Arrow education. It's time to lift Oklahoma from its current rank of 49th in education. Together, we can create a brighter future for our students and community.”

“I decided to run for the school board because none of the current board members have children actively enrolled in the district. I want to ensure that parents with enrolled students have a voice.”

Dr. Williams brings a unique perspective to her candidacy. In addition to being a parent, she is a small business owner of People First Content and an adjunct professor of composition at The University of Tulsa and Tulsa Community College where she teaches recent graduates of Broken Arrow High School and surrounding schools. Her leadership experience includes serving as secretary for Oklahoma Women in Technology and as vice president and president of the Home and School Board at Holy Family Cathedral School.

"I'm excited to connect with the people I hope to represent and share my vision for the future of education in Broken Arrow," said Dr. Williams. "I encourage all Zone 5 residents to join the conversation and share their thoughts."

The January 2 event will be a casual opportunity for Zone 5 residents to meet Dr. Williams in person. A brief introduction and remarks will take place at 7:30 PM, and light refreshments will be provided.
