“Our prototype demonstrations have generated incredible excitement, and we're thrilled to bring our cutting-edge, AI-enhanced 3D technology to CES,” said Jeff Carlson, CEO of Metavista3D. “This innovation marks a transformative step in how we experience 3D content, with applications in the metaverse, virtual reality, and beyond.”

Metavista3D's patented Super-Multiview (SMV) technology offers a stunning, glasses-free 3D experience without additional memory or processing requirements. By generating thousands of perspectives in real time, the displays deliver exceptional clarity, improved depth perception, and eliminate common issues like fuzziness, headaches, and eye strain typically associated with traditional 3D technologies.

CES attendees are invited to visit the Metavista3D booth at Venetian Expo, Hall G – 61053.

Attendees will have the opportunity to experience Metavista3D's debut large-format displays – available in 43" – and witness the future of immersive viewing. The technology is poised to impact multiple sectors, including medical, gaming, automotive, military applications, and consumer electronics.
