Rise in emphasis on physical appearance, particularly hair, among young people, combined with changing lifestyles, particularly in developed countries, are hair shampoo trends that are expected to drive the growth of the global hair shampoo market. Furthermore, increase in number of people experiencing hair and scalp problems as a result of unhealthy eating habits, as well as rise in pollution levels globally, is expected to drive the growth in the global hair shampoo market. Moreover, rise in disposable income and consumer preference for professional hair care products are expected to drive the revenue growth in the target market.

Hair shampoo is a liquid that is applied to the hair improve its condition, look, feel, appearance, shine, and manageability. It is useful for repairing, smoothing, strengthening, and reducing split-ends as well as reducing damaged hair. Shampoos come in a variety of forms, including liquids, gels, and creams, as well as lighter lotions and sprays. Hair shampoo products are available for all hair types, including dry, oily, and curly hair.

Hair shampoos are an essential component of personal care. The global market for shampoos is expanding due to an increase in the prevalence of hair-related disorders such as dandruff, dryness, hair fall, oily hair, and itchiness. Change in lifestyle, increase in urbanization, and rise in environmental pollution all contribute to the growth of the hair shampoo market. Consumers are becoming more conscious of personal hygiene and care, and they are willing to spend money to maintain their personal well-being. Furthermore, the availability of a wide range of hair shampoos via various distribution channels, as well as the use of best-in-class technology in product development, is assisting in the hair shampoo market growth. This also leads as one of the hair shampoo market opportunities.

The hair shampoo industry is witnessing increase in demand for vegan and cruelty-free products, and brands are responding accordingly. However, along with health and safety concerns, the consumer demographic supporting the “vegan & cruelty-free” trend is looking for environmentally responsible products. Natural substitutes for hair shampoos, such as plant-based and mineral-based ingredients, are becoming increasingly popular. As a result, the major hair shampoo brands are proactively eliminating animal testing from their production procedures to improve their product positioning and boost long-term sales.
