Who we are and who we become is greatly influenced by our connection to family. It is the basis of who we first see ourselves to be.”

Charles Paul Collins

The novel's structure portraying three imagined journals depicting the lives of Collins' ancestors, is a direct link to the content contained within the masterclass section entitled Family & Personal Heritage, which deals with all the lessons and content we learn from the heritage and cultures we come from, and how they shape us.

Collins explains: “Who we are and who we become is greatly influenced by our connection to family. It is the basis of who we first see ourselves to be. Heritage includes everything you learn from your family and your personal encounter with the world and its many heritages.

Family & Personal Heritage - one of the Five Elements taught in the practice of life crafting, is about understanding what those who came before us passed along to each generation which may have an effect on us today - even though we may be unaware of it.

This is how the novel “The Remembering: Of Leather & Stone” came to be. Understanding who we are in part, through understanding the heritage and cultures we come from, and how they shape us, like social practices, and family culture is a central part of the Life Crafting Framework taught in the masterclass.”
