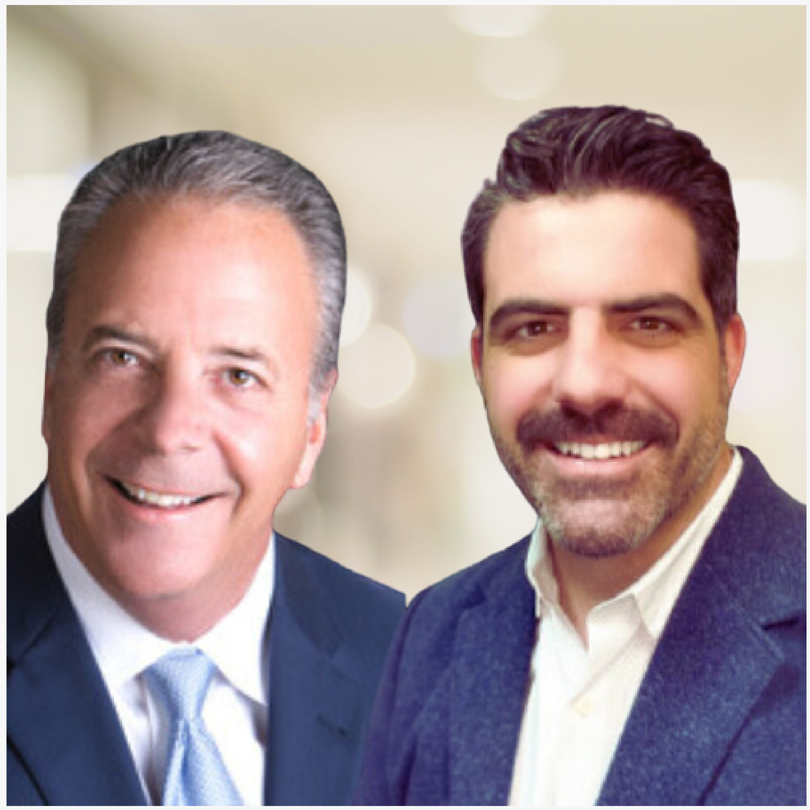
Richard Hanson and Andrew Hanson, With Generations Wealth Management Group, Featured in TV Interview



HENDERSON, NV, UNITED STATES, January 9, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Richard Hanson and his son Andrew Hanson represent a father-and-son financial advisory team at Generations Wealth Management Group. Together, they specialize in personalized family and generational financial planning, offering a comprehensive, collaborative approach to help families secure their financial futures.

The Hansons were recently featured in an interview on Fox's "The Morning Blend," where they emphasized their dedication to treating clients like family. During the interview, Richard Hanson shared, "Our mission is simple—to treat each client as one of our own. Financial planning is more than numbers; it's about understanding a family's unique needs and helping them create a legacy that stands the test of time."

Living retirement to the fullest is not merely about reaching retirement age; it requires a comprehensive approach that begins long before the actual retirement date. Proactive planning is essential, focusing on key areas such as income, expenses, and preparing for potential market volatility. Here's how these elements come together to create a fulfilling retirement experience.

The journey to a fulfilling retirement starts well before the retirement date. Engaging in planning and discussions about what retirement will look like is crucial. This includes understanding personal goals, aspirations, and the lifestyle one wishes to maintain. Individuals can establish a solid foundation for their retirement years by starting early.

A significant aspect of proactive planning is managing income and expenses. Hanson points out that controlling these financial elements is vital for a healthy retirement. This means ensuring enough income to cover living expenses while planning sustainable withdrawals from investment accounts. By keeping withdrawals manageable, retirees can mitigate the impact of market fluctuations on their financial health. Ultimately, proactive planning leads to peace of mind. When retirees know they have prepared for various scenarios—such as unexpected expenses, health issues, or market downturns—they can focus on enjoying their retirement. Hanson highlights that doing the "dirty work" ahead of time allows individuals to live confidently, knowing they have a solid plan.

Generations Wealth Management Group tailors strategies to individual families, ensuring a customized experience aimed at achieving long-term financial goals. By fostering a collaborative process, Richard and Andrew guide their clients through crucial decisions that impact future generations, making financial planning a truly family-first experience.
