Trucking accidents are preventable. Through education, accountability, and systemic change, we can build safer roads for everyone sharing the highways.”

Siamak Vaziri, Managing Partner

According to national data, driver error continues to be one of the leading causes of trucking accidents.

Factors such as inadequate training, driver fatigue, and distracted driving contribute significantly to collisions. The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) has identified that a large percentage of truck-related crashes are linked to driver-related issues.

To address these challenges, Vaziri Law Group emphasizes the importance of comprehensive and ongoing training for commercial truck drivers. Such programs ensure drivers are well-prepared to navigate the complexities of operating large vehicles, manage fatigue, and adhere to safety protocols. Proper training not only improves individual driver performance but also contributes to broader road safety improvements.

Mechanical failures are another critical factor in trucking accidents. Issues such as brake malfunctions, worn tires, and steering failures have been identified in over half of injury-related trucking accidents, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA). Routine vehicle maintenance and timely inspections play a pivotal role in reducing these risks.

“Trucking companies must prioritize regular maintenance to ensure their fleets meet safety standards,” said a representative from Vaziri Law Group. “By addressing mechanical issues proactively, companies can significantly lower the likelihood of preventable accidents.”

The firm also points to the impact of corporate practices on road safety. Tight delivery schedules and unrealistic deadlines often push drivers to their limits, increasing the risk of accidents caused by speeding or insufficient rest. Fatigued driving has been recognized as a major contributor to accidents involving large trucks. Implementing more humane scheduling practices and prioritizing driver well-being can create safer conditions for everyone on the road.

Substance abuse among commercial drivers is another area of concern. Regular screening programs are essential to ensure that drivers operating heavy vehicles remain sober and alert. Such initiatives safeguard not only the drivers themselves but also other road users.

The firm advocates for a multifaceted approach to tackling these issues, including:

Enhanced driver training programs to address fatigue management and safe driving practices.

Rigorous vehicle maintenance protocols to identify and address mechanical issues promptly.

Realistic delivery schedules to reduce pressure on drivers and promote adequate rest.

Comprehensive substance abuse prevention measures through consistent testing.

Vaziri Law Group is committed to supporting accident victims and their families, offering compassionate legal representation and advocating for measures that improve road safety.
