

Neutrily Launches AI-Powered Assistant to Transform Co-Parenting and Reduce Conflict

Neutrily's AI-powered assistant rewrites co-parenting emails, reducing conflict and fostering cooperation for families.

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, January 13, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Neutrily, a new AI-powered co-parenting service transforms how separated parents communicate by combining advanced artificial intelligence with human mediation. Designed to reduce conflict and improve cooperation, Neutrily prioritises the child's well-being while offering a practical solution for one of modern parenting's toughest challenges.

How It Works

Co-parents email their Neutrily Virtual PA with their message. The Virtual PA rewrites it into a neutral and professional tone, removing emotional language, and sends it directly to the other co-parent as an email. By acting as a neutral third party, Neutrily eliminates emotional triggers, ensuring clear and respectful communication. This innovative approach fosters cooperation and reduces the stress often associated with co-parenting.

Why It Works

Studies show that co-parenting challenges often stem from emotionally charged communication. Neutrily's unique system—blending responsible AI with human oversight—addresses this by removing direct interactions between co-parents, allowing for better outcomes and less conflict. This aligns with the UK's broader push toward alternative dispute resolution methods and reducing reliance on the courts.

A Modern Solution for Modern Families

Parenting experts emphasise that effective communication is critical for co-parenting success, yet many separated parents struggle with emotional tension and misunderstandings. Neutrily
