Annie Peuquet, Director of Partnerships at Polygence

and Polygence, a pioneer in personalized research and mentorship programs, announce their partnership to provide pathway-building opportunities for students.

In its forty-year history, Envision has provided over one million students with life-changing opportunities to travel to university campuses to participate in career exploration programs that expose them to real-world challenges. From home, Polygence provides students the chance to take that newfound direction and explore it with tailored mentorship through flexible, project-based learning in the student's unique passion.

Recognizing the need to connect career exploration to concrete outcomes, this collaboration offers students a facilitated pathway to transform their insights into real-world learning opportunities through tailored mentorship and flexible, project-based learning.

“Relevance breeds engagement, engagement spawns inspiration”, said Dr. Jan Sikorsky, Vice President of Innovation at Envision by WorldStrides. “By partnering with Polygence, Envision students now have a path beyond inspiration to explore their career interests through mentored research experiences.”

“Envision by WorldStrides has an incredible legacy of transformational programming that has had a remarkable impact on students' lives as they consider their own passions and purpose. Polygence is thrilled to join their network of partners to provide personalized, flexible, and student-centered research opportunities to inspired students eager to better prepare themselves for the world ahead,” says Annie Peuquet, Director of Partnerships at Polygence. “Students often leave an incredible summer program with a spark, a newly opened door of understanding into their future. But once they return home, students need a bridge to continue that pathway they’ve uncovered, back in their everyday lives. We are excited to help students build that path.”

Beginning January 2025, students will have the opportunity to pair an Envision Experience Summer Program in Medicine, Healthcare, or Engineering with a mentored research project in a student’s unique subject area through Polygence’s 1:1 Core Research Program or its group course, Pods.
