Infinity Sports Management manages some of the top drivers from karting through Formula One. The group is known for developing the world’s next generation of drivers and equipping them with the best team and support network. Infinity’s roster includes current and former F1 drivers and numerous top-ranked drivers rising through the ranks.

“We are delighted to have Liam join us,” said Infinity Sports Management Director Gary Catt. “Given Liam’s raw talent on track and boundless creativity, his potential in this industry is undeniable. We’re super excited for the season ahead.”

Nachawati, who has been a competitive kart racer for half of his life, races with Kart Republic and Jay Howard Driver Development in U.S.-based races. He is a team member of Italy-based BabyRace Driver Academy under the direction of former Formula drivers, Leonardo and Alesio Lorandi.

Love for motor sports culture runs in the family. Nachawati's grandfather immigrated to the U.S. from Lebanon and worked 30 years as a spot welder on a General Motors assembly line, building Cadillac Escalades. His father worked summers on the assembly line while putting himself through law school. Liam's goal is to reach the F1 ranks, and he is excited about the planned addition of a Cadillac team to F1 in 2026.

"What sets me apart is my relentless determination and commitment to improvement," Nachawati said. "I approach every lap with the goal of being better than the last. I'm constantly working with my teams and coaches to refine strategies, improve performance, and learn from every experience, whether it's a victory or a tough race."
