

CALL FOR ABSTRACTS FOR THE NATIONAL SPACE SOCIETY'S 2025 INTERNATIONAL SPACE DEVELOPMENT CONFERENCE

Speaking Proposals will be Accepted at the Conference Website Through March 31, 2025

KENNEDY SPACE CENTER, CA, UNITED STATES, January 21, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Potential speakers are invited to submit abstracts for the National Space Society's annual International Space Development Conference[®] (ISDC[®]), which will be held on June 19-22 in Orlando, Florida. Presentations covering a wide variety of space exploration, development, and policy topics are welcomed.

The ISDC is the annual keynote event of the National Space Society (NSS), bringing together leading executives, managers, engineers, scientists, educators, students, and laypeople from a wide variety of backgrounds to join in working toward the common goal of developing a spacefaring civilization. The ISDC has attracted tens of thousands of people from dozens of countries and features important thought leaders from NASA, commercial space, media, academia, and other space-related fields.

Subject areas for ISDC 2025 include the exploration, development, and settlement of the Moon, Mars, and cislunar space; deep space exploration; innovative spaceflight technology; the commercialization of space and space infrastructure; life support systems; collaboration in space; living in space; space solar power; the problem of space debris and mediation solutions; planetary defense; space law; and both national and international space policy, among others.

The current roster of confirmed speakers appearing at ISDC 2025 includes: Jared Isaacman, Mission Commander Polaris Dawn and Inspiration4
