What's driving the growth of the Adakveo market?

A significant driving factor for the adakveo market is the increasing prevalence of sickle cell disease. This inherited blood disorder, caused by the presence of an abnormal variant of hemoglobin known as hemoglobin S in red blood cells, continues to affect a large number of individuals. The growing prevalence is largely due to factors like higher birth rates in regions with endemic malaria, genetic inheritance patterns, and improved survival rates owing to advanced medical care. Adakveo aims to reduce the frequency of vaso-occlusive crises in patients, which are painful episodes triggered by the blockage of blood flow in small vessels. Accordingly, with a growing number of people diagnosed with sickle cell disease, the demand for Adakveo is expected to rise.

Who are the key players in the Adakveo market?

A notable player operating in the adakveo market is Novartis AG. The company's effort, coupled with the continuous research and development activities in the marketplace, are significant drivers of the industry's growth.
