What is driving the Growth of the Vectibix panitumumab Market?

Increasing prevalence of colorectal cancer is a major factor propelling the vectibix panitumumab market. Colorectal cancer, which starts in the colon or rectum, is generally influenced by genetic, lifestyle, or environmental factors. Factors such as an aging population, better survival rates, genetic predispositions, and environmental influences can be attributed to the rising prevalence of colorectal cancer. Vectibix panitumumab, a monoclonal antibody, targets and inhibits the epidermal growth factor receptor EGFR, which aids in slowing tumor growth and progression in patients with wild-type KRAS tumors, thus an effective therapeutic option for those who haven't responded to conventional chemotherapy treatments. The World Health Organization WHO estimates that the global burden of colorectal cancer will significantly rise by 2040, with 3.2 million new cases annually marking a 63% increase.

Moreover, the rising demand for personalized medicine is another key driver for the vectibix panitumumab market. Personalized medicine focuses on customizing treatments and strategies based on the unique characteristics, needs, and preferences of each patient. The increasing demand for targeted therapies that improve patient outcomes while minimizing side effects is propelling the demand for personalized medicines.
