"Threads To Thrive is our way of giving back through fashion," said Samantha Hernandez, owner of Mauve Shoppe. "We believe that what we wear can influence how we feel, and every woman deserves to step into life's opportunities with confidence. This program is about more than just clothing—it is about empowerment and support."

Each quarter, Mauve Shoppe partners with a local organization to provide outfits to women who need them most. This quarter, Threads To Thrive is working with Providence House, a New Jersey-based organization that provides services to survivors of domestic violence.

How Threads To Thrive Works

1. Local businesses and sponsors contribute $50 per sponsorship to fund an outfit.
2. Mauve Shoppe curates a complete outfit, selecting pieces that match each recipient's size and needs.
3. The outfit is then delivered to a woman in need, offering her the confidence to move forward.

Building on a Legacy of Community Support

Since opening two years ago, Mauve Shoppe Boutique has been dedicated to fostering a sense of community at the Jersey Shore. Samantha has used the boutique as a hub for collaboration, featuring products from local businesses and hosting events that support small business owners. In addition to highlighting other brands, Mauve Shoppe has a strong tradition of giving back by donating a portion of proceeds from in-store events to local charities.

With Threads To Thrive, Samantha is expanding her boutique's mission to help local women gain the confidence they need to succeed.

Local Businesses Encouraged to Get Involved

Businesses and individuals can directly impact the lives of local women by sponsoring an outfit for $50. Sponsors will receive recognition on Mauve Shoppe's website and social media as supporters of this initiative.
