Anticipated drivers of this growth are similar to the historical pattern, but with a emphasis on technological advancements, personalized medicine, digital health solutions, genetic therapies, and the integration of artificial intelligence that is expected to escalate market growth.

What Drives The Hyqvia Market Growth?

The increasing prevalence of autoimmune diseases is another vital growth driver for the Hyqvia market. Often caused by a mix of genetic predisposition, environmental triggers, diet change, higher exposure to pollutants and improved diagnostic capabilities, autoimmune diseases are on the rise. These diseases, where the immune system mistakenly attacks healthy cells, tissues or organs, can be managed using Hyqvia. It delivers immunoglobulin therapy, which modulates the immune system and minimizes abnormal immune responses.

For instance, a National Library of Medicine systematic review in August 2022, identified 928 cases of autoimmune conditions associated with COVID-19 vaccinations. A considerable 81.5% of these were new-onset autoimmune disorders. Thus, the increasing occurrence of autoimmune diseases internationally is a growth propellant for the Hyqvia market.
