Guests will be guided through an evening of artistic appreciation and cultural dialogue. The choice of the Asia Society and Museum as the venue reflects its mission to navigate shared futures for Asia and the world through policy, arts and culture, education, sustainability, business, and technology.

The mission of the Leng Jun Art Foundation is to empower the next generation of artists and scholars through various forms of support, including scholarships for Asian students studying in the United States. This aims to promote the inheritance and innovation of Eastern and Western art, contributing to the healthy development of artistic diversity. In line with this mission, the foundation plans to establish educational institutions in the United States, offering realistic, high-quality, and practical guidance and services.

In addition to supporting emerging talents, the foundation promotes cultural exchange through artist residency programs, providing free conditions and opportunities for creation, exhibition, and communication. This aims to better showcase and exchange the profound and rich art history and continuously expanding artistic expressions of the East and West. The foundation is committed to the inheritance and innovation of art, widely and deeply synchronizing with social progress while respecting Mr. Leng Jun's artistic ideals. In today's world, deeply changed by high technology, and as most industries are gradually being replaced, the role and mission of art in human life will undergo significant changes. Traditional aesthetics and modern fashion will deeply intervene in people's spiritual interests and moral life. "We can see that art has never occupied and influenced so much of human life as it does today, shaping the future of humanity. In the journey of enhancing and returning to the human spiritual home, its influence far exceeds that of philosophy and science, second only to traditional religion," stated Leng Jun, Co-Founder.
