Both are related to the construction industry in a complementary way to facilitate construction projects in a more effective way. In other words, the combination can be more fruitful and individual benefit which is the purpose of this cooperation.

That is what has happened with this collaboration. Both firms have concluded that they should cooperate through their in-house resources and deliver the best of services. Although the latter part will rarely happen there is hope and let's keep it that way.

Meanwhile, every member of the staff is instructed and trained with a new understanding of professionalism. This includes all experts showing the utmost respect to other firms and their tasks. Everyone was trained for this professionalism based on their role and expertise to avoid any possible problems in the future. Moreover, a collaboration among teams crosses from both firms which also proved quite motivating.

Also, this cooperation includes sharing each other's expertise regarding service-related skills and customer handling. The teams are taught to value one another through teamwork in order to achieve the better and better outcome.

All of this was achieved through two weeks of training which was carried out by the concerned managers. However, additional training staff was hired for this training, and all the staff were required to attend. The wholesome process was closely monitored and assessed by the assigned experts along with a completion assessment.

All of this was managed only to achieve the best possible outcome for both Watson Drafting and World Estimating.
