Positive Airway Pressure Device Overview

Positive Airway Pressure devices help in keeping the airways open for sleep apnea patients and prevent it from collapsing while they sleep thereby enabling them to breathe normally.

Positive Airway Pressure Devices Market Dynamics

According to the latest data provided by the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare, in 2022, around 8.5 million (34%) people in Australia were estimated to have chronic respiratory conditions. Additionally, as per the recent data provided by the Global Burden of Disease (2023), approximately, 1 in 20 people globally suffers from chronic respiratory diseases. Thus, positive air pressure devices, including Continuous Positive Airway Pressure (CPAP) and Bi-level Positive Airway Pressure (BiPAP), offer critical support by delivering consistent airflow to keep the airways open and ensure proper ventilation. As the global incidence of chronic respiratory diseases rises, driven by factors such as aging populations, increasing pollution, and lifestyle changes, the demand for positive airway pressure devices correspondingly grows.
