RA Fischer Co. expands insurance coverage for FDA-cleared hyperhidrosis treatment, making sweat relief more accessible at home.

Hyperhidrosis—excessive sweating—is a surprisingly common condition, yet it remains underdiagnosed and undertreated. According to the International Hyperhidrosis Society, it affects approximately 4.8% of the U.S. population, equating to about 15.3 million individuals. The prevalence is notably higher among younger adults, with 8.8% of those aged 18–39 experiencing the condition. Nearly 17% of teenagers suffer from excessive sweating, a rate significantly higher than previously reported.

Many parents reach out to RA Fischer Co. in frustration, seeking a solution for their child who is battling the emotional and physical toll of hyperhidrosis.

“We hear from parents every day who are desperate for answers,” said Lisa Stewart, Sr. Treatment Specialist at RA Fischer Co. “Their child is embarrassed to raise their hand in class, their sports gear is soaked, or they’re avoiding social interactions. When they realize insurance
