combination therapies, rare autoimmune diseases, personalized medicine, and the uprise in cancer immunotherapies.

The market size for Regkirona regdanvimab is expected to sustain a strong future growth FCAGR in the next few years, rising to $XX million in 2029. This growth in the forecast period is anticipated to stem from the rising prevalence of chronic and degenerative diseases, an increase in autoimmune diseases, the growing acceptance of biologic drugs, the rising incidence of inflammatory diseases, and an increase focus on IL-6 as a therapeutic target.

What is behind the increase in demand for Regkirona regdanvimab in the market?

Autoimmune diseases, which are conditions where the immune system mistakenly attacks the body's own healthy cells, tissues, or organs, are on the rise. This rise is attributed to genetic predisposition, environmental triggers, poor diet, chronic stress, hormonal changes, increased awareness and diagnosis, and an aging population. Regkirona regdanvimab plays an integral role in reducing the risk of autoimmune disease exacerbations by preventing severe COVID-19 infections that trigger immune system dysregulation. For instance, in November 2024, according to Versorgungsatlas.de, a Germany-based organization, in 2022, out of a total of 73,241,305 insured individuals, 6,304,340 were diagnosed with at least one autoimmune disease, yielding a raw prevalence rate of 8.61%.
