Bruton's Tyrosine Kinase Hematological Cancer Overview

Bruton's Tyrosine Kinase (BTK) hematological cancer refers to a group of cancers that are influenced by mutations or dysfunctions in the Bruton's tyrosine kinase (BTK) gene. BTK is a crucial enzyme involved in the signaling pathways of B-cells, which are essential components of the immune system. When this gene is mutated or abnormal, it can lead to the development of hematological cancers, such as Chronic Lymphocytic Leukemia (CLL), Mantle Cell Lymphoma (MCL), and Waldenström's Macroglobulinemia (WM). These cancers arise from B-cells and are characterized by the overproduction of malignant cells that disrupt normal immune function. Targeting BTK with inhibitors, such as ibrutinib and acalabrutinib, has become a key therapeutic approach in treating these hematological malignancies, offering effective treatment options by blocking the BTK enzyme and hindering the growth and survival of cancerous B-cells.
