Luxury Goods, 2025

has expanded the customer base for luxury brands. High net-worth individuals and the rise of the middle class with disposable income fuel the demand for luxury products. This wealth growth enables consumers to indulge in premium goods, reinforcing the luxury market's expansion. As more people achieve financial stability and prosperity, their spending on luxury items increases, contributing to luxury goods market demand.

The luxury goods industry comprises products of superior quality and high value. Developing countries such as India, Japan, China, and South Korea are anticipated to exhibit an increase in demand for luxury goods, owing to increased disposable income and rise in living standards. Manufacturers' focus on developing elegantly designed and affordable products for upper-middle and upper-class customers is expected to propel luxury goods market growth. Luxury goods market segmentation includes product type, mode of sale, and gender.

The luxury goods market has been segmented based on product type, mode of sale, gender, and region. Based on product type, the luxury goods market is bifurcated into designer apparel, jewelry & timepieces, accessories, cosmetics, fine wines/champagne, and spirits. Based on the mode of sale, the market is segmented into retail and online. Based on gender, the market is divided into the male and female. Region-wise, the market is divided into North America, Europe, Asia-Pacific, Latin America, Middle East, and Africa.

Based on product type, the global luxury goods market is segmented into designer apparel & footwear, jewelry, accessories, cosmetics & beauty products, fine wines/champagne & spirits, travel goods, and others. The other segment includes luxury products such as writing instruments and electronic gadgets. The growth of the tourism industry and travel retail is expected to boost the sales of products in the luxury travel goods segment. In developing regions such as Asia-Pacific and LAMEA, higher demand for luxury goods and accessories is anticipated owing to the higher tourism rate and evolving luxury goods market demand.

The mode of sale is either retail or online. The retail sector is the major channel in terms of revenue generation that includes physical stores, flagship stores, brand outlets, retail shops, and others. It accounted for around 90% share of the global market revenue in 2023 as it is the most approachable and preferred mode among consumers. However, the online sales segment is anticipated to grow at the highest CAGR during the forecast period due to improvements in various digital platforms and increasing e-commerce websites in various regions.

Traditionally, beauty products, cosmetics, accessories, and designer apparel were majorly used by women. However, these products are gradually gaining popularity among men as well. Luxury travel goods, designer apparel, and other products are largely used by men owing to the change in spending habits and improved shopping experiences. Females account for more than 65% share in the global luxury goods market while the share of male customers is comparatively lower. However, the male consumers segment is anticipated to grow at the highest CAGR of 4.6% during the forecast period which is expected to create more luxury goods market opportunities in the upcoming years.

In the year 2023, Europe and Asia-Pacific collectively accounted for nearly two-thirds of the worldwide luxury goods market size and are expected to maintain their dominant position throughout the forecast period. However, Asia-Pacific is projected to be the fastest-growing region, followed by LAMEA.
