Why is the increasing incidence of myelodysplastic syndrome MDS a key growth driver?

The increasing incidence of myelodysplastic syndrome MDS, a group of disorders caused by dysfunctional blood-forming cells in the bone marrow, is expected to propel the growth of the Reblozyl market going forward. MDS is characterized by the insufficient production of healthy blood cells and potential progression to leukemia. With an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 new cases of myelodysplastic syndromes diagnosed annually in the United States alone, demand for treatments such as Reblozyl is only expected to rise.

Who are the significant players in the Reblozyl market?

Key industry players currently dominating the Reblozyl market include Bristol-Myers Squibb Company and Merck & Co. Inc. These companies' strategic investments and groundbreaking research have significantly influenced the growth and direction of the market.
