What can we expect in the coming years?

Analysis predicts that the macugen market size is set to see XX FCAGR in the next few years. In particular, it will grow to $XX million in 2029 at a compound annual growth rate CAGR of XX%. The growth during this forecast period can be primarily attributed to increased diagnosis and treatment rates, a growing prevalence of AMD, increased investment for healthcare infrastructure, and rising awareness of diabetic eye complications.

With Bausch + Lomb Inc, a major player in the ophthalmology sector, at the helm, the macugen market is moving towards innovative solutions. Additionally, AMD is projected to affect approximately 288 million individuals by 2040, increasing the potential market for Macugen. Macugen, which inhibits vascular endothelial growth factor VEGF, not only reduces abnormal blood vessel growth and leakage in the retina but also preserves vision and slows disease progression, providing substantial relief for AMD patients.
