Virtual Summit Highlights

The Spark Curiosity Virtual Summit featured an impressive lineup of speakers who shared innovative approaches to classroom engagement:

-Rodrick Johnson, the "Energizer Educator," kicked off the event with dynamic strategies for classroom motivation

-Olivia Odileke's opening welcome emphasized making each day in class feel like "the big game day" and treating every discovery like a touchdown

-Eirik from Curipod demonstrated how to enhance social interactions through AI-generated feedback integrated with digital lessons

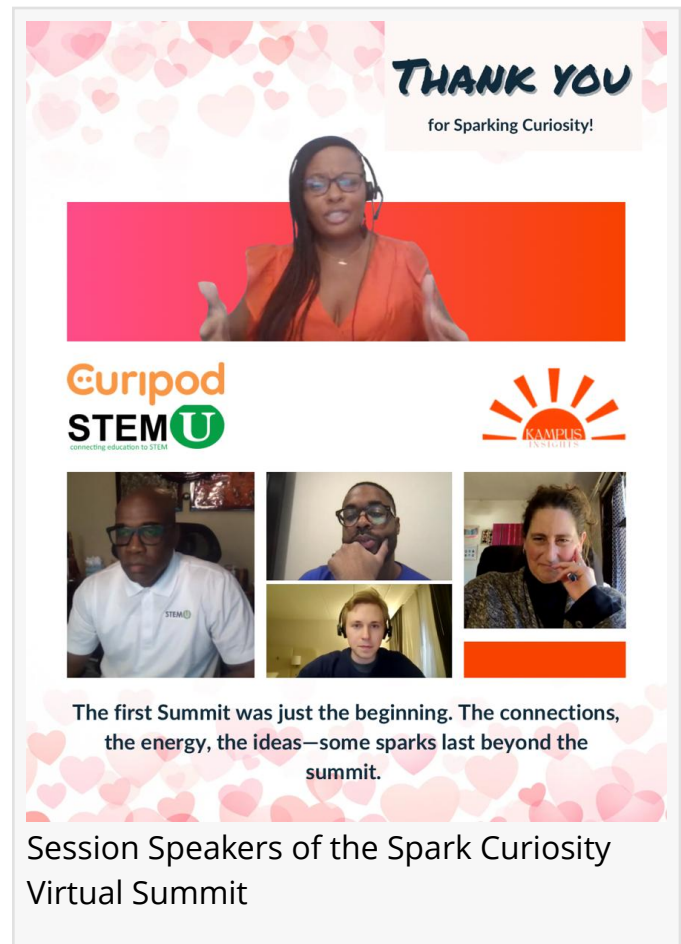

-Chris from STEMU showcased real-world STEAM lab applications that connect learning to career paths, increasing student curiosity

-Katherine from Creosity Space unveiled a free book of science-based entrepreneurial ideas designed to spark elementary students' curiosity

-Olivia from Kampus Insights presented micro-inquiry tasks that make concepts stick by making the obvious not-so-obvious

-A closing panel offered practical advice for new teachers on infusing curiosity-based learning into classrooms

"It was truly a powerful and inspiring conversation that sprinkled ideas on the educators present," said Vanessa Williams, contact representative for Kampus Insights.

This is not just another conference. It's time to discover new ways of bringing content to life. Every discovery begins with a spark, and we hope that this spark catches on FIRE.”
Olivia Odileke

Upcoming In-Person Conference

Building on the virtual summit's success, the Spark Curiosity EDU Conference promises an intimate, transformative experience for K-12 educators and leaders committed to fostering curiosity, innovation, and fearless teaching. The conference will feature:

1. A Juneteenth Kick-Off Reception at a private venue
2. A full day modeling a curious classroom at the Austin Public Library
3. A closing reception and networking event at a local downtown restaurant

"We are so excited to host this transformative event," said Conference Planning Chair Olivia Odileke. "This is not just another conference. We want to inspire and provide practical strategies teachers can implement within a few days. It's time to discover new ways of bringing content to life. Every discovery begins with a spark, and we hope that this spark catches on FIRE."

The conference is designed for visionary educators in Texas who want to embrace new instructional practices with power and courage. With limited attendance, the event promises personalized attention and meaningful connections.
