With Joe La Truite Psychedelic Punk Metal Anthem “Bad Death City” – Video Single, Joe La Truite fuses the experimental sound of bands like Faith No More and Primus, delivering a unique blend of hard-hitting punk energy, psychedelic elements, and metal madness. The new track reflects the growth and synergy of the band, with all three members— Julien Liphard (Guitar/Vocals), Charles Roussel (Bass/Vocals), and Martin Denquin (Drums), contributing equally to the writing and arrangement of the 13 tracks that will make up their upcoming 2025 album.

With this single, the band prepares to present their bold new direction to the world, cementing their place in the underground music scene.

"Our forthcoming album, due later this year, was conceived as a video game concept, so we wanted Bad Death City to be stage one, like Street of Rage in a dark and dirty city.

Julien had this mysterious-sounding guitar riff that reminded us of the detective atmosphere in Gotham City or Sin City, so it became the basis of the track. The title of the track was already decided: Bad Death City, literally translated as Mallemort, the village where Julien lived when he was young; we also wanted the verses to be rapped, to give the track a street and ghetto feel.

The dark city is described as a place where murder is for sale, a dead man makes no fuss!" JLT

Review.

"Bad Death City" takes on a classic, '80s hip-hop style to start out with before launching into a groove-heavy metal punk chorus that is a stark yet welcome contrast. The song seems to both delight in spoofing white hip-hop heads while celebrating the genre at the same time. But the raw brutality of the chorus always anchors us back to punk, making for a truly dynamic track.

The deceptively simple video starts out pretty straight forward but introduces some heavily trippy elements by the end, living up to the band's description as psychedelic punk." - Julie River - New Noise Magazine
