Don't miss a second of the excitement—James Hadnot, Lawrencia Moten, Todd Bozeman, and the HBCU GO Sports crew will have fans covered with expert analysis and in-depth coverage of this must-watch matchup.

The action tips off with the Women's Game at 1 PM ET, followed by the Men's Game, both streaming live on HBCU GO. Sports analyst James Hadnot will provide play-by-play commentary, bringing fans courtside to one of the most heated matchups in SIAC basketball.

The excitement doesn't stop there—the HBCU GO Sports Crossover Show Presented by Swiffer, hosted by Nicole Hutchison and Tolly Carr, will premiere following the Women's game. The show provides the HBCU community with an in-depth weekly look at the HBCU sports scene and culture, including player profiles, game highlights, exclusive interviews, and more.

As February continues, this matchup highlights the legacy of excellence in HBCU athletics and the rich history of CIAA, SWAC and SIAC conference basketball. These programs and others have shaped future pros and continue to build on the tradition of Black college sports. HBCU GO is proud to celebrate Black History Month by showcasing the best of HBCU culture and sports all month long.

Women's Game:

Fort Valley State has dominated this rivalry, winning six of the last seven meetings, including a 59-56 victory earlier this season on February 1. They'll look to continue their winning streak and defensive strength against an Albany State team that thrives on rebounding dominance.

Albany State enters the game as the conference leader in rebounding, pulling down an impressive 43 boards per game. They are powered by Keyra Petterson, the SIAC's top rebounder, averaging more than 9 rebounds per game. Albany State will need to control the glass and limit second-chance points to disrupt Fort Valley State's momentum and even the season series.

Men's Game:

Albany State has engineered one of the biggest turnarounds in the conference this season—last year, they finished seven games under .500 in conference play, but this year, they're fighting for a division title. A win on Saturday would be their 17th of the season, tying their highest win total in 27 years.

Leading the charge for Albany State is returning All-Conference standout Shakur Poteat, who will be the focal point of their offense as they look to extend their winning streak over Fort Valley State, having won the last two matchups.

On the other side, Fort Valley State is led by Sayerr Senghore, who is averaging 12 points per game and ranks third in the conference in rebounding (8.1 RPG). They will need a strong defensive effort and aggressive rebounding to slow down Albany State's momentum and prevent history from being made on their home court.

With Albany State chasing a milestone season and Fort Valley State looking to snap their losing streak in this rivalry, expect a high-energy battle with major SIAC implications on the line.
