Confidentiality is at the very core of A Safe Haven for Newborns. No names of the mothers or of the locations will ever be shared with the public. No announcements of a saved newborn will be publicized. When a distressed teen or woman reaches out for help, the only question asked is "how can we help".

A Safe Haven for Newborns has been working diligently to protect the life of the unborn child. And, the only way to protect the infant is to ensure the mother feels safe and is taken care of.”

Based on the information she shares, she will be given the support she needs. From referring her to a maternity home or shelter, pre-natal care, counseling, other health-related issues, referring her to the nearest hospital if she is ready to give birth, and information on adoption are just a few of the services and support available to her. The Foundation’s mission is to provide the information and support she needs to make her own decision about what is best for her and her unborn baby.

"For the past 24 years, A Safe Haven for Newborns has been working diligently to protect the life of the unborn child. And, the only way to protect the infant is to ensure the mother feels safe and is taken care of," said Nick Silverio, Founder of A Safe Haven for Newborns. To date, 424 newborns (414 in Florida, nine in other states, one in Honduras) are growing up in a loving home with their adoptive parents; and the birth mother has been given a chance to continue with her life knowing that she gave her newborn a very special gift, the gift of life and family.

A Safe Haven for Newborns believes that the best, healthy approach is direct surrender. For the birth mother, placing her infant in the arms of trained medical personnel at a hospital, fire station, or EMS station will give her the peace of mind she needs to know that her baby is in safe hands. The trained professional can provide the mother immediate care or give her information on how she can get counseling services. They can also gather critical healthcare information regarding the newborn, such as family medical history, that could affect the infant.

All hospitals, fire and EMS stations display the Safe Haven for Newborns signage designating them as a safe haven. Signage is provided at no charge to the hospitals and firehouses. The Foundation also provides the medical personnel with the training to know what to do when a newborn is surrendered.

The Foundation receives over 2,000 calls annually asking for help.

will work with the birth mother to reinstate her parental rights. There have been other cases where the mother will reach out to A Safe Haven for Newborns months after the surrender period has passed and they will work with her to provide the help she needs. They can refer her to a counselor or provide baby items to make sure they are both taken care of. In Florida, a newborn may be surrendered in the arms of a trained medical professional at a hospital or manned fire/EMS station 30-days or younger with no legal repercussions.
