Real Meat. Real Science. Real Solutions.

Policymakers, investors, and meat industry leaders from around the world committed to creating a more sustainable food system were among attendees. Notable speakers included the Rt. Hon. Chris Skidmore, former UK Energy Minister and Chair of the Net Zero Review, Danielle Nierenberg, President of US think tank FoodTank, and renowned Chef Andrew Hunter.

Under the theme "Standing on the Shoulders of Giants:

Learning from the Great Inventors of Our Time", discussions focused on leveraging technological innovation to scale sustainable meat production. Attendees toured the Meatable lab facilities, engaged with leadership and scientists, and sampled the company's cultivated meat products, reinforcing the viability of sustainable proteins.

A key outcome of the summit was the recognition that collaboration is essential to driving systemic change in the meat industry. The event facilitated strategic partnerships and underscored the importance of cross-sector cooperation in accelerating the transition to sustainable proteins.

"Action is what drives real progress," said Jeff Tripician, CEO of Meatable. "By bringing together industry pioneers, we are forging partnerships that will shape the future of food."

Meatable extends its gratitude to all attendees for their contributions in making the summit a success. The company is committed to scaling cultivated meat solutions and leading the meat industry toward a sustainable future.
