Chlorinated polyethylene is a thermoplastic polymer utilized in cables as a thermoset, interconnected insulation, and sheathing substance with decent electrical and adequate physical attributes. The merger of monomers in polymer generates a rubber polymer, and when sufficiently compounded, CPE compounds provide aversion to a broad aggregate of fluids, solvents, and homogenous substances.

It can frequently serve as an economical, ecologically friendly option to CSP while nearing acquiring the chemical, flame, and UV aversion. It is treasured for its robustness, longevity, and aversion to chemicals. It is a perfect option for flexible packaging solutions such as bags, wraps, and pouches, impacting the chlorinated polyethylene market growth favorably.
