The E-2 visa offers foreign entrepreneurs the opportunity to establish and operate businesses in the United States. However, many investors struggle with the decision of whether to build a business from the ground up or acquire an established enterprise. Global Immigration Partners' latest study highlights the pros and cons of each approach.

Key Insights from the Report:

E2 Visa

Buying an existing business provides a higher likelihood of E-2 visa approval due to established financial records and operational stability.

Starting a business offers greater flexibility and potential for high returns but comes with higher risks and a longer establishment period.

Due diligence and strategic planning are critical for success, regardless of the investment choice.

"Our team of experienced immigration attorneys understands the complexities of the E-2 visa process," said [Spokesperson's Name], a senior partner at Global Immigration Partners. "This analysis is designed to provide investors with the clarity they need to choose the best path for their U.S. business venture."
