

Jason Schenker Opens Bipartisan CSIS Panel on Immigration Policy Solutions for Critical Worker Shortages

Jason Schenker highlighted key findings of a 2024 CSIS paper he coauthored before Democratic and Republican Congressmen discussed bipartisan immigration reform.

WASHINGTON, DC, UNITED STATES, March 4, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Prestige Economics and The Futurist Institute are pleased to announce that Jason Schenker, Chairman of The Futurist Institute and President of Prestige Economics, recently participated in a high-profile event hosted by the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) on "Immigration Policy Solutions for Critical Worker Shortages."

This event was inspired by the CSIS report “Immigration Policy Solutions for Shortages in Critical Sectors of the U.S. Economy.” The discussion addressed pressing labor market challenges and explored how immigration policies can help mitigate workforce shortages across key industries. Jason Schenker, Thibault Denamiel, and William Alan Reinsch coauthored this report.

Schenker contributed his economic expertise to the CSIS report and the live event on February 26. He offered insights into the structural labor shortages in the U.S. economy and the broader macroeconomic implications of workforce constraints. His analysis underscored how tight labor market conditions, demographic shifts, and sector-specific shortages are reshaping economic growth and business strategy.

It’s encouraging to see bipartisan attention and support for immigration policy solutions that address critical worker shortages. This is not just an economic issue—it’s an economic security issue.”

Jason Schenker

“The U.S. labor market remains historically tight, and labor force participation rates among older workers have declined significantly,” said Schenker. “At the same time, industries like healthcare, construction, agriculture, child care, and manufacturing face acute labor shortages that threaten long-term economic stability. Immigration policy represents a crucial lever for addressing these challenges and sustaining economic growth.”

As part of the discussion, Schenker highlighted findings from Prestige Economics and The Futurist Institute on potential future growth trends, shifting workforce dynamics, and the role of economic policy in securing future labor supply as a critical element of economic security. His participation reinforced the critical intersection of economics, immigration policy, and workforce planning in securing America’s economic future and bolstering America’s economic security.
