Growing funding in food production is driving the fermented ingredients market demand. For instance, as per Invest India, total foreign direct investment (FDI) in the Indian food processing sector culminated to USD 11.08 billion from April 2000 to March 2022, and makers prefer progressive fermentation technologies. This funding is sanctioning the generation of varied, elevated standard fermented products that serve consumer demand for health and wholesomeness.

Technological progressions are driving the market demand. Inventions in bioreactor design and automation promoting progressive sensors, actuators, and control systems authorize accurate monitoring and control of fermentation enhancing product standards. Additionally, automation lessens the reliance on skilled labor, notably lessening functional prices for manufacturers.
