McLennon's passion for storytelling began in childhood, nurtured by her love for literature and an early exposure to biblical stories, Hardy Boys adventures, and church prizes that rewarded her reading accomplishments. Writing became a natural extension of her imagination, leading her to craft essays, poetry, and tributes for colleagues before finally fulfilling her dream of writing a novel. Her debut poetry collection, 'Ode to Lillet Rose,' honored her late mother, and 'Sins of the Parents' marks her transition into novel writing, bringing her storytelling to a wider audience.
