- Aging populations, increasing susceptibility to inflammatory conditions
- Environmental influences and lifestyle changes
- Genetic predispositions to autoimmune disorders
- Rising cases of inflammatory diseases, such as cryopyrin-associated periodic syndromes (CAPS)

Ilaris plays a critical role in managing inflammatory conditions by targeting interleukin-1 β , effectively reducing inflammation and its associated symptoms. According to a September 2023 report, the incidence of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) in Canada was 30 per 100,000 people, with approximately 11,000 new cases diagnosed that year. This figure is expected to increase by 0.58% annually, reaching 32.1 per 100,000 by 2035. Such projections highlight the growing demand for Ilaris, making it a key driver of market expansion.
