What Are the Primary Drivers of the Emgality Market?

A major factor propelling the Emgality market forward is the rising global prevalence of migraines. Migraines, characterized by severe headaches often accompanied by nausea, sensitivity to light, and other neurological symptoms, have been increasing due to:

- Higher stress levels in modern lifestyles
- Changes in dietary and sleep patterns
- Environmental triggers and pollution

Emgality operates by blocking calcitonin gene-related peptide (CGRP), reducing the frequency and intensity of migraine attacks. This results in improved quality of life and reduced migraine-related disabilities for frequent sufferers.

A May 2023 study by Migraine Canada highlighted the widespread impact of migraines:

- 12% of Canadians (4.5 million people) suffer from migraines
- Over 1 billion people worldwide are affected
- Women (30% lifetime prevalence) are more affected than men (8%) and children (10%)
- 1-2% of the global population experiences chronic migraines

These figures indicate a substantial growth opportunity for the Emgality market.

Who Are the Leading Companies in the Emgality Market?

The Emgality market is primarily driven by Eli Lilly and Company, which has been at the forefront of developing innovative migraine treatments.

What Are the Emerging Trends in the Emgality Market?

An important trend in the Emgality market is the rise of strategic partnerships, which aim to enhance technology integration and expand market reach.

One key example is the December 2023 partnership between Organon & Co. and Eli Lilly:

- The collaboration focuses on expanding access to Emgality and RAYVOW across Europe.
- Organon is responsible for distribution and promotion, while Lilly manages manufacturing and regulatory approvals.
- The partnership prioritizes addressing the significant impact of migraines on women, strengthening Organon's women's health portfolio.
