How Does Ozone IV Therapy Work?

In ozone autohemotherapy, a small sample of the patient's blood is withdrawn and mixed with medical-grade ozone gas. This mixture is then reintroduced into the bloodstream through an intravenous (IV) line, allowing the oxygen-rich blood to circulate throughout the body, delivering therapeutic benefits directly to tissues and organs.

Ozone gas is known for its powerful antiviral, antifungal, and antibacterial properties. This makes it particularly effective for patients dealing with chronic infections, including those searching for ozone therapy for herpes or looking for herpes post comments related to the treatment's efficacy.

For those seeking more intensive therapy, hyperbaric ozone therapy near me and ten pass ozone therapy near me are available options that provide higher doses of ozone in a controlled environment. Treatment Schedule and What to Expect

Ozone IV Therapy typically involves 1-3 sessions per week, depending on the patient's condition. For chronic conditions, up to 20 sessions may be recommended. After each session, patients may experience detox symptoms such as mild fatigue or flu-like sensations. These are temporary and usually subside as the body begins to heal.

At Patients Medical, we encourage you to take the first step toward healing with ozone therapy. Many of our patients report increased energy, improved immune function, and better overall well-being after just a few treatments.
