With a focus on real-life challenges & the resilience of affected families, this episode of New Frontiers offers viewers a thoughtful look into the work being done by the Fly Little Bird Foundation.”

Christian Alain, Executive Producer at Planet TV Studios

This installment takes a closer look at the Fly Little Bird Foundation, a family-led nonprofit committed to advancing research and treatment for ultra-rare diseases, particularly those associated with TBL1XR1 gene variants. The episode examines the Foundation’s dedicated efforts to support individuals and families affected by conditions linked to intellectual and developmental disabilities, autism spectrum disorder, epilepsy, as well as heart, brain, and kidney defects.

In this segment, viewers will gain insight into the Foundation’s work through discussions with researchers, clinicians, and patient advocates, illustrating how families and experts come together in support of a cause that affects countless lives. The episode aims to inform the public about the challenges and progress in rare disease research, emphasizing the role of community and collaboration in addressing complex medical issues.

Adding a distinctive element to the program, Planet TV Studios welcomes back Gina Grad as host. A respected radio personality, author, and podcast host, Gina is widely recognized for her engaging presence on The Adam Carolla Show and her acclaimed children's book, My Extra Mom. Her warm delivery and thoughtful storytelling promise to bring clarity and depth to the discussion, ensuring that viewers receive a comprehensive look at the Foundation's efforts and the broader context of rare disease research.
