What Is Driving Growth In The Spikevax Market?

The increasing prevalence of COVID-19 cases is a major factor driving the Spikevax market. SARS-CoV-2, the virus responsible for COVID-19, spreads through respiratory droplets, leading to symptoms ranging from mild fevers to severe respiratory conditions. Vaccination remains a key preventive measure alongside personal hygiene practices.

The rising number of COVID-19 cases is linked to several factors:

- Emergence of new viral variants
- Waning immunity levels
- Relaxed pandemic restrictions
- Increased indoor gatherings
- Variations in vaccine coverage across regions

Spikevax vaccines help combat COVID-19 by training the immune system to recognize and fight the SARS-CoV-2 virus through an mRNA-induced spike protein, providing strong protection against severe disease. For example, a report by the Office for National Statistics, a UK government body, found that as of March 2023, approximately 1.9 million UK residents reported long COVID, with 69% experiencing symptoms for over a year and 41% continuing for more than two years. This growing burden of COVID-19 cases is expected to fuel the continued expansion of the Spikevax market.

Who Are The Key Players In The Spikevax Market?

The leading company in the Spikevax market is Moderna Inc., which continues to make significant strides in vaccine production and distribution, playing a crucial role in global pandemic response efforts.
