Meet Laura Engel:

With a background in Early Childhood Education and Child and Adolescent Development, Laura Engel brings a unique perspective to Strategic Conversations. For over 15 years, she has dedicated herself to nurturing children's curiosity, individuality, and growth. Laura believes traditional educational systems often overlook the unique qualities of each child, which inspired her to create a 100% outdoor learning environment where children are free to explore, play, and learn in nature. Her teaching philosophy champions a child-led approach, prioritizing discovery over rigid benchmarks and nurturing each child's potential at their own pace.

Laura's dedication to this philosophy stems from her own childhood experience. Growing up in an abusive household where she often felt unseen, Laura found her life's purpose in creating a different path for her students—one where every child feels valued, heard, and supported. She brings a profound sense of compassion to her work, ensuring that her classroom is a space of belonging and respect, where achievements are celebrated, even if it's just for the simple act of peeling a banana.

Outside the classroom, Laura channels her adventurous spirit into travel, collecting experiences that fuel her love of discovery. She shares these stories with her young learners, inspiring them to see the world with curiosity and kindness. Laura's journey exemplifies her belief that education is not just about teaching skills but about shaping emotionally intelligent, self-aware individuals.

Through her work, Laura seeks to impact not just her students but also their caregivers, equipping them with tools to raise empathetic, self-regulated children who will become thoughtful decision-makers.
